

ABSTRACT

A lintel for support of masonry units above a wall opening consisting of a structural support beam that is entirely contained within the wall cavity, and perforated suspension members that are connected to masonry units with threaded masonry anchors and to connection strut with tee-headed bolts. The connection strut is continuously attached to the support beam, allowing adjustment of the position of the suspension member along the axis of the support beam.